THE PIOCHE DAILY RECORD

WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.—The Missis sippi River rises within sixty miles of the northern boundary of the United States, and flows south to the Gulf of Mexico. The distance from its source to its mouth in a direct line is about 1,400 miles. Three States border on the west and five on the east side of the river, and two States are crossed by it. Including Minnesota, in which it rises, and Louisi-ana through which it flows, eleven States and ten Territories lie west of the Mississippi. These States and Territories constitute about five ninths of the area of the country. Their growth in wealth and population during the last ten years has been immense, and there is every reason to believe that the increase will be equally as great during the next de-cade. The mineral wealth and agricul-tural resources of this division of the country exceed those of the eastern half. The chief respect in which the latter has superior advantages over the former is in the number and extent of navigable streams and available water-power for propelling machinery. But a hardy and enterprising people inhabit the great West, and the facilities that have been denied by nature can in a large measure be supplied by the industry and enter-prise of man. The region west of the Mississippi now contains about one-sixth of the population of the nation. The tide of emigration that is flowing into West, and the rate at which its resources west, and the rate at which its resources are being developed justifies the predic-tion within ten years it will contain at least one fifth of the population and wealth of the United States.
